What Is an Allyship Test?

An allyship test is a structured evaluation designed to assess an individual's knowledge, attitudes, and behaviors related to being an effective ally. Allies are people who actively support and stand up for marginalized or underrepresented groups without being part of those groups themselves. The test typically measures understanding of social justice concepts, empathy towards others' experiences, and the readiness to take meaningful action. Allyship tests can be formal, such as quizzes or assessments administered by organizations, or informal, such as self-reflection exercises.

These tests serve as a benchmark to gauge how well allies perform in encouraging inclusivity and combating discrimination. They help highlight unconscious biases, gaps in knowledge, and areas where additional education or practice is needed. Ultimately, an allyship test functions as both an educational and accountability tool.
