Snowball's Plans and the Windmill Debate

One of the central events in chapter 5 is Snowball's ambitious plan to build a windmill, which he believes will improve the animals' lives by providing electricity and reducing labor. This proposal sparks a heated debate among the animals, particularly between Snowball and Napoleon. Snowball articulates the benefits of modernization, while Napoleon remains skeptical and silent during the discussions.

Napoleon's Power Grab

Napoleon's strategic maneuvering culminates in his use of the nine trained dogs to chase Snowball off the farm. This violent act effectively removes Snowball as a rival and consolidates Napoleon's control over Animal Farm. The dogs' aggression intimidates the other animals and marks the beginning of Napoleon's authoritarian rule.

Changes in Leadership and Propaganda

Following Snowball's expulsion, Napoleon assumes full leadership and begins altering the farm's policies. The pigs increasingly manipulate the other animals through propaganda, mainly delivered by Squealer, to justify Napoleon's decisions and discredit Snowball. This shift foreshadows the erosion of the original revolutionary ideals.

Adjustments to the Farm's Rules

Several commandments and principles established after the rebellion are subtly changed or ignored to suit Napoleon's agenda. These modifications reflect the corruption of power and the betrayal of the animals' initial hopes for equality and freedom.
