Overview of AP Human Geography Unit 2 Content

The AP Human Geography Unit 2 focuses primarily on population and migration, essential themes that explore how human populations change and move across the globe. This unit examines patterns of population distribution, density, and growth while also addressing demographic transitions and their implications. Understanding these concepts is vital for grasping broader human geographic trends and their social, economic, and environmental impacts. The unit also covers migration theories, types of migration, and the factors influencing migration decisions. These topics provide a foundational knowledge base that supports comprehension of human-environment interactions and global demographic shifts.

Population Distribution and Density

Population distribution refers to the spread of people across the Earth's surface, while population density measures the number of people per unit area. These concepts help identify regions of high and low population concentrations and explain the factors driving these patterns, including physical geography, climate, and economic opportunities. The unit explores various population clusters and sparsely populated areas, facilitating a deeper understanding of human settlement trends.

Demographic Transition Model

The Demographic Transition Model (DTM) is a key concept in Unit 2, illustrating the transition of countries from high birth and death rates to low birth and death rates as they develop economically. The model is divided into stages that reflect changes in population growth rates and age structures. Mastery of the DTM is crucial for analyzing population changes and predicting future demographic trends.
