Understanding Dominance and Submission

Dominance and submission represent two fundamental roles in certain relationship dynamics, especially within BDSM culture. A dominant partner typically exercises control, takes the lead, and enjoys guiding interactions, while a submissive partner tends to yield control, follow directions, and derive pleasure from surrendering power. These roles are not fixed personality types but rather expressions of preferences that can vary by context and relationship. The dominant role is often associated with confidence, assertiveness, and responsibility, whereas the submissive role may involve trust, openness, and receptivity. Recognizing these distinctions is essential for individuals seeking to understand their own tendencies through an are you sub or dom quiz.

Definitions and Context
