Understanding Command and Exclamation Sentences

To effectively use command and exclamation worksheets, it is vital to first grasp the basic concepts behind command sentences and exclamatory sentences. Command sentences, also known as imperative sentences, are used to give instructions, directions, or orders. They often begin with a verb and imply a subject "you," which is usually omitted. In contrast, exclamatory sentences express strong feelings such as excitement, surprise, anger, or joy and typically end with an exclamation mark.

Characteristics of Command Sentences

Command sentences are straightforward and focus on prompting action. They often omit the subject, relying on the context to convey who should perform the action. The tone can be polite or firm depending on the context and wording.

- Begin with a verb (e.g., “Stop,” “Listen,” “Write”)
- Imply the subject “you”
- Can end with a period or sometimes an exclamation mark for emphasis

Characteristics of Exclamatory Sentences

Exclamatory sentences convey emotional intensity and require an exclamation point at the end. They often start with words like “What” or “How,” but can also be simple phrases expressing surprise or excitement.

- Express strong emotions
- End with an exclamation mark (!)
- Can begin with “What,” “How,” or other expressions
