Understanding Fragments and Sentences

Understanding the difference between sentence fragments and complete sentences is fundamental to mastering English grammar. Sentence fragments are incomplete thoughts that lack either a subject, a predicate, or a complete idea, making them grammatically incorrect when standing alone. On the other hand, complete sentences contain at least one independent clause with a subject and predicate, expressing a full thought. Fragments and sentences worksheets are designed to help learners recognize these differences by providing examples and exercises that highlight the structural components of sentences.

What Is a Sentence Fragment?

A sentence fragment is a group of words that does not express a complete idea because it is missing essential components such as a subject or a verb. Fragments often occur when a dependent clause or phrase is mistakenly presented as a standalone sentence. For example, "Running down the street" is a fragment because it lacks a subject performing the action.

What Constitutes a Complete Sentence?

A complete sentence must have a subject and a predicate and convey a full thought. It can be simple or complex but must stand independently. For example, "She is running down the street" contains both a subject ("She") and a predicate ("is running down the street") and forms a complete sentence.
